1 It's a sunny day and Simon and Jasmine are reading the newspaper. They come across an advert looking for archaeology enthusiasts who are interested in finding a lost city in the desert. They contact the archaeologist, Professor Peng, who is organising the expedition and arrange their trip together. Philip Cummins, a greedy accountant, overhears their plans and decides to follow them, in order to claim the lost city for himself. They set off and head for Mount Everest, in the Scottish highlands. During their journey they look for clues and find pieces of glass that will help them discover the location of the lost city. After a tiring few weeks, they find all the pieces and are able to find the entrance to Karminia. Inside they find a room full of jewels. Suddenly, the greedy accountant and his two assistants arrive in order to claim Karminia for themselves. There follows a struggle and finally Cummins and his men surrender, when Simon pretends to have a knife. A journalist arrives by ski lift and interviews the four archaeologists. He writes the best story of his life and the four friends tell the world about the lost city of Karminia.
